

Pick of the Month – February 2013

AT Pick:

Hebrew U scientists help blind 'see with eye music'

From the Jerusalem Post:

“By activating their visual brain cortex, people who were born blind can describe objects and even identify letters and words, with the proper stimulation and using a device for sensory exchange developed by Hebrew University researchers.”

“They developed a unique training program for seeing using the device, which transfers visual information to the blind via their healthy senses.”

Read the entire article at http://www.jpost.com/Health/Article.aspx?ID=298773&R=R1&utm_source=twitterfeed&utm_medium=twitter.